Preliminary conclusions

- Geographical proximity matters (even in the era of the so-called death of distance, thanks to social networks)
- During the COVID 19 pandemic Geographical proximity has become a great danger, and is mostly unwelcomed
- It is somewhat replaced by organized proximity at distance (virtual exchanges, zoom meetings...), less risky
- These virtual exchanges are crucial and expanding

From Cramarenco Romana Emilia to Everyone: 08:01 PM
Thank you for your presentation! Can you refer to the social distancing impact on education, research but also on professional training?

From Roxana Briscariu to Everyone: 08:10 PM
Thank you for the presentation and sharing your work with us! My question has to do with teleworking and the real estate market. What do you think that will happen to office buildings? The teleworking will change the proximity that existed before the pandemic, the choice of home location depending on the workplace?

From Fatih ALTUG to Me: (Privately) 08:13 PM
Thank you Professor Constantin this nice organization

From ceaplu000 to Everyone: 08:15 PM
What is the place of fake news in the relationship between Covid and proximity? can we talk about a fake proximity which disappears once "real news" are regaining the place?

From Gabriela Marchis to Everyone:
Thank you very much!
